Public Relations Strategy of Saka FM Community Radio

In Maintaining Existence As A Da'wah Media

ABSTRACT

The existence of the public relations function eases an institution to establish good relations with the community. The role of public relations in an institution is needed to maintain its existence, both in government and private institutions. Therefore, this study aims to determine the role of private-public relations in maintaining its existence. In particular, this study describes the strategy carried out by the Saka FM community radio public relations in maintaining its existence as a da'wah media. This research uses a qualitative approach. Besides, this research was carried out on the Saka FM community radio under the auspices of the Gedhe Masjid at Kauman. The determination of informants is used by purposive technique. Data collection is done by observation, in-depth interviews, and documentation. This research uses Niche theory which states that the founding pillar of a media is divided into three namely capital, types of content, and types of audience. The results showed that based on the Niche theory, Saka radio was able to stand on its own. The Saka FM radio public relations strategy has not fulfilled its ideal function as a community radio. Nevertheless, Saka FM radio has been able to maintain its existence as a da'wah media through its marketing department.
